Quote to Note

"You can never cross the ocean unless you have the courage to lose sight of the shore."

— Christopher Columbus

Breakdown of Law & Order?

Methinks the Republican Establishment on Capitol Hill must be watching too many Law & Order repeats on cable TV, as I read the reaction of a Republican congressman seemingly attacking the House Freedom Caucus, a.k.a. Tea Party Republicans for pushing U.S. Rep. Kevin McCarthy out of the Speaker's race. This congressman called it all a "breakdown of law and order." Apparently, those running the show don't like getting one-upped. They must think in GOP Divine Right, huh?

Loco for Trump?

It appears that to the bewilderment of the progressive left, Donald Trump has started picking up support in the legal immigrant communities across the country, just as he promised he would back when he first announced his candidacy. Apparently, legal immigrants see the threat to the livelihoods.

So, it is Viva Donald Trump and maybe not so viva for Jebetto in English or Spanish.

Hit Piece on Trump from NY Slimes

The NY Times recently did a hit piece on Donald Trump, looking into his business career and into his personal life. I wonder when the NY Times will do its hit piece on Hillary Rotten Clinton.

A Bipartisan Bill All Should Support

Recently, I read an op-ed piece in the NY Times by U.S. Rep. Tim Murphy, R-PA, and a piece of legislation he has been pushing on Capitol Hill called the Helping Families in Mental Health Crisis Act. I thought this

Law Does Not Provide for a Social Security Cost-of-Living Adjustment for 2016

With consumer prices down over the past year, monthly Social Security and Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits for nearly 65 million Americans will not automatically increase in 2016.

The Social Security Act provides for an automatic increase in Social Security and SSI benefits if there is an increase in inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers (CPI-W). The period of consideration includes the third quarter of the last year and a cost-of-living adjustment (COLA) was made to the third quarter of the current year. As determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, there was no increase in the CPI-W from the third quarter of 2014 to the third quarter of 2015. Therefore, under existing law, there can be no COLA in 2016.

Other adjustments that would normally take effect based on changes in the national average wage index also will not take effect in January 2016. Since there is no COLA, the statute also prohibits a change in the maximum amount of earnings subject to the Social Security tax, as well as the retirement earnings test exempt amounts. These amounts will remain unchanged in 2016.

The Department of Health and Human Services has not yet announced Medicare premium changes for 2016. Should there be an increase in the Medicare Part B premium, the law contains a "hold harmless" provision that protects approximately 70 percent of Social Security beneficiaries from paying a higher Part B premium, in order to avoid reducing their net Social Security benefit. Those not protected include higher income beneficiaries subject to an income-adjusted Part B premium and beneficiaries newly entitled to Part B in 2016. In addition, beneficiaries who have their Medicare Part B premiums paid by state medical assistance programs will see no change in their Social Security benefit. The state will be required to pay any Medicare Part B premium increase.

Information about Medicare changes for 2016, when available, will be found at www.medicare.gov.

For additional information, go to www.socialsecurity.gov/cola.

THE TEMPLE OF VESTA

(The Best Little Virgin House in Old Rome)

Last week we discussed the origin of the sacrificial fire, the candle-lit vigil, and the eternal flame. This week we continue with a reminder that the sacred fire, the source of all life and power in ancient Rome, was kept alive in a structure known as the Temple of Vesta. It was constantly tended on by a group of virgin priestesses that were called Vestals (Latin, Virgines Vestales). They resided near the temple in the Forum Romanum. The whole concept goes back into antiquity when the Vestals represented the daughters of the primitive tribal chief, and they kept alive the State-fire in their father's hut. The public worship of this goddess was maintained in the Temple of Vesta during later years, but her private worship was preserved in every domestic hearth. After she was recognized as a personal deity, it then became necessary to have her attendants live in guarded seclusion in a structure that we now call "The House of the Vestal Virgins" or "Atrium Vestae."

The temple was a round structure, probably reminiscent of the tribal chief's hut. This edifice was the most venerated of all temples in Rome. Tradition tells us that the first temple to Vesta was built by Numa Pompilius, the successor to Romulus, and the first of the Sabine kings of Rome. He introduced the worship of this goddess, and devoted to her a space of ground just in front of his own house. It is also interesting to note that at this time in history, about 700 B.C., the king was the high priest, and in this office he was known as "Pontifex Maximus" or "Pontiff."

There were at least five successive temples that were built in Rome to honor the goddess Vesta. They all adhered to the same style of architecture. It was always a small circular edifice with a domed roof that was supported on columns. This design was thought to typify the round earth and the vaulted sky. The interior contained a low circular altar, upon which burned the perpetual fire. The maintenance of this fire was the chief duty of six vestals.

Numa's temple stood for about three centuries until the Gauls burned Rome in 390 B.C. It was soon rebuilt and the second edifice stood for about 50 years. The third temple to Vesta stood until the great fire under Nero, and the fourth lasted for about 100 years. The remains which now mark the consecrated site belong to the last rebuilding by Septimius Severus (about 200 A.D.) and this work is contemporary with the great arch of Septimius Severus at the opposite end of the Forum from Vesta's temple.

Simple TIMES . . .

by Girard A. Plante

Recently, I strolled inside my neighborhood grocery a block from my home. It's a cozy corner spot in a village setting that brings in local folks, laborers of all manner, and college students. The issues of the day are discussed and debated there. The discussion already in full throttle was immigration. And scurvy.

Years have passed since I last heard the word uttered in junior high. Listening to three patrons argue whether scurvy would be brought into America by migrants from a few nations at war in our chaotic world, I held back instead of jumping in. Most patrons add her or his two cents. Because I thought it impossible that scurvy exists anywhere in the 21st century, I knew research would satisfy my interest in knowing.

So I kept that thought until I returned home to conduct a sort of "refresher course" on the history, cause and effect on its unfortunate victims, and the year its name was born. I do know that scurvy is historically associated with sailors away at sea centuries ago. Yet I never knew what exactly caused the disease, nor what scurvy did to the body once contracted.

Thus, I set out on my own voyage in this era of powerful search engines that spit out a vast amount of information at lightning speed. One source, encyclopedia.com, offers this account of the disease's original name, "Scorby." The source continues: "Scurvy is the disease that is the consequence of a prolonged deprivation of Vitamin C."

Now that I established the origin of the word, as well as its cause, the following further depicts scurvy's havoc of the human body. "After ten or more weeks at sea, men began to experience general pain and stiffness, while the lower body became covered with large purple spots. Their gums would swell and grow over their teeth, which became loose; and old wounds would reopen. Finally, sufferers would die suddenly. This is explained as the consequence of impaired protein synthesis, with connective tissues weakening, so that the wall of a major artery would burst."

The discovery of prevention arose in the late sixteenth century. I also wondered which foods saved countless misery before death from scurvy. The same source explains: "It soon was discovered that the disease could be prevented, and even cured, by sailors consuming fresh fruit and vegetables." But lengthy time at sea would rot the food, the source added. "Sailors preferred oranges and lemons."

Yet years would pass before discovering ways to preserve these fruits. "Sailors in the British navy were required, from early in the nineteenth century, to take a portion of lime juice in their brandy and rum." Potatoes also cured scurvy, but had to be cooked daily.

Scurvy even consumed people on land after years recognizing that bacteria plays a direct role in onset of the hideous illness. Again, the scoop from encyclopedia.com: "At the end of the nineteenth century, it became a practice in some cities to sterilize cows' milk. Children's deaths from summer diarrhea were reduced greatly as a result of this practice." Scurvy struck anyway as the sterilizing process killed Vitamin C. New remedies retain Vitamin C and save potatoes from rot.

There you have it. A brief overview of the damage to the body and ultimate death caused by scurvy and the cure-all foods that saved lives.

Does scurvy exist today? You can find that answer in a few taps of your iPhone or Android or laptop or tablet or desktop computer.

My research quickly came from Google at my desktop. I thought back to how many hours were exacted at my junior high school's library, neighborhood branch library, or the glossy full-volume set of World Book Encyclopedia at home in researching scurvy. No doubt a couple hours. But the activity proved enjoyable without the availability of the myriad options of twenty-first century technology.

Ruling Class Republicans Versus the Tea Party Upstarts Standing Up for America

by Sal Giarratani

Next year's presidential campaign is up and going so far in advance. Leaders in both parties are trying to steer their groups in the right direction.

The internal battle grew more turbulent after the upset of 2010 when the Republican Right took over control of the House. Four years later, Republican voters grew strong enough to hand the Republicans control of the Senate, too.

However, as members of the Tea Party outsiders grew embolden, it appeared the Republican House and Senate leadership started backtracking on their promises to take back America. Most Republicans and conservatives thought that with John Boehner and Mitch McConnell in charge that the rollback of the Obama agenda would begin, but what most Tea Party Republicans saw was weakness. Republicans caving in on every count.

When Harry Reid ran the Senate, he always got what he wanted. Now that Harry Reid is minority leader, he is still getting what he wants. Where are the Republicans in charge?

Many folks truly believe that there is a ruling class in this country. I am talking about Hollywood, Wall Street, Madison Avenue, Big Corporations, Big Unions, Capitol Hill, Democrats, Republicans are all on the same page.

Some think we are at a tipping point as far as being a constitutional democratic republic. Many voters are frustrated and have simply given up voting since no one listens to them anymore. As my friend Mark told me, I just listen to sports talk radio, in a comfy chair and await the water taking over his living room. He pretends he is coming up to the end of his cruise on the Titanic. Don't Worry, Be Happy, you should not be. But look around and see why there are so many Marks out there sounding like Jeremiahs feeling the approaching doom.

Many out there feel a sense of doom and we have a choice, give into the doom, or take it on. I will take it on because I am an American and this is my country and yours, too.

Don't be like Mark. Remember the Battle of Bunker Hill. Remember the Alamo. Remember Pearl Harbor. Remember 9/11. Sing along with Lee Greenwood, "God Bless the USA."

NICOLA J. GAMBALE

On the morning of October 14th, Nicola J. Gambale, 83, of Leominster, passed away at Health Alliance Leominster Hospital, following a brief illness.

He was born May 30, 1932, in Boston, son of the late Nicola and Michelina (Chiango) Gambale, and lived in East Boston for many years before moving to Littleton and then Leominster. Mr. Gambale served in the U.S. Army during the Korean Conflict.

Mr. Gambale drove a truck most of his life before working at McDonald Mechanical in Boxborough and after his retirement for Bill's Auto Parts.

A hard working man of many talents, he will be remembered for his big heart, his honesty, his love of gardening and being a proud veteran. He loved his family and friends and was quick to offer a lending hand. One contribution he was especially proud of was his volunteer effort for the paper drives with Cardinal Cushing.

He was a member of the Revere VFW and the Franco American War Veterans in Leominster.

He leaves his wife of 63 years, Phyllis A. (Brienzi) Gambale; one son, Nicholas Gambale and his wife, Julie of Upton; one daughter, Brenda Baker and her husband, Paul of Safety Harbor, FL; three grandchildren, Philomena Fritz and her husband, Patrick, Derek Baker, Daniel Baker and his wife, Melissa; as well as many great-grandchildren; brothers George, Anthony and Alphonse Gambale; sister Carmella D'Amore; many nieces, nephews, great nieces, and great nephews.

He was predeceased by his son, Allen Gambale and his siblings, Charles and Phil Gambale, Angie Scarpetta, and Jenny Diminico.

The family's heartfelt thanks goes out to the staff at Health Alliance Leominster Hospital for their warm and tender care of Nicola.

Simard Funeral Home, Leominster, assisted the family with arrangements.

Contributions in Nicola's name may be made to a charity of your choice.

L'Anno Bello: A Year in Italian Folklore

Bewitched in Italy

by Ally Di Censo Symynkywicz

Magic. That word resonates like a sizzling charm on my lips. Everything involving magic fascinates me. I adore the Harry Potter books. One of my supreme guilty pleasures is the Hallmark film series The Good Witch, about a mysterious woman that moves to a quaint little town and improves the lives of the residents through her good-natured charms. My favorite Halloween costume is a witch's hat, sleek and mystical and classic. I think that works concerning magic so inspire me because magic is a traditionally female-centric discipline. In ancient times, the village "wise woman" was a folk healer learned in the power of herbs and ready to assist the townspeople through travails like illness and childbirth. The folk healers became negatively stereotyped as witches once male doctors rose into power in the later Middle Ages. Nowadays, it is nice to see the image of the witch represent positive female power and magic. As Halloween approaches, it is prime time to think of the mysterious and mystical side of life. My mind wanders to Italy, where one finds no shortage of magical and spooky folklore.

I can think of many examples in my own Italian American family of strong and wise women. My grandmothers fit the archetype of the knowledgeable folk healer. Their kitchens are cozy dens where something always seems to be bubbling and cooking. Moreover, my grandmothers brim with the stories, anecdotes and proverbs that can only derive from many years of hard-earned experience and wisdom. Nonna Luisa, my mother's mother, has a dog-eared and faded notebook full of loose-leaf recipes — not well-defined guidelines, but rather recipes depending on pinches of this and a little bit of that. I always marvel at her ability to create traditional delicacies from memory, her hand trained by years in the embrace of family members cooking up their own recipes in their ancestral kitchens. In European villages of yore, including those in Italy, older women like my grandmothers were often looked upon as purveyors of folk remedies and magical cures. In Italy, this kind of folk practice sometimes goes under the name Benedicaria, a loose term for blessings and cures that combine Catholic tradition with older pre-Christian lore. Most Italians who know of folk remedies, however, would not call them by any particular name but rather acknowledge them as family lore passed down through the ages. Yes, it seems that along with delicious recipes and holiday traditions, magic is spread among many Italian families as well!

Many of the superstitions, charms and practices rooted in Italian folk history still leave an indelible mark on the culture today. My grandmother often speaks of malocchio, or evil eye — the old Mediterranean belief that a gaze of jealousy or magic can impart real harm on someone. A folkloric test to verify if you are indeed under the spell of malocchio involves dropping a dollop of olive oil into a plate of water. If the oil molds into one large circle in the middle of the water, it is a sure sign that you are cursed, though fortunately special rituals will cause the drop of oil to disperse and relieve the curse! Another amulet against the evil eye still sold in many Italian shops is the cornio, or a charm made out of lucky red coral shaped like a horn. My grandmother is always quick to remind me of a plethora of other Italian superstitions and customs that reflect this folk tradition. Birds in the home are bad luck, for they symbolize death. Never spill olive oil, as it is a precious and unsurpassed staple of the Italian kitchen. Always bless bread by making a Cross on the dough before placing it in the oven. These customs offer a fascinating glimpse into the importance on nourishment, health and community amongst Italians. As symbols of Italian heritage and history, these nuggets of folklore further represent the ingenuity and values of our ancestors.

This time of the year, it is easy to think upon the supernatural. Halloween decorations like eerie glowing jack-o-lanterns and white sheeted ghosts beckon at us from storefronts and doorways. Yellow and brown leaves swirl against a cloudy sky, and the howl of the wind calls to mind wailing spirits or mournful werewolves. Yet when we think of the most famous Halloween symbol of all, the witch, we should know that she is rooted in a complex history of folklore, feminine power, and cross-cultural traditions. In Italy as elsewhere in Europe, the people later maligned as witches were actually the folk healers and wise women of ancient villages. Many of the lore and practices surrounding these age-old traditions continue to be recognized and seen in Italy today. So with Halloween quickly upon us, it is right to think of the magical side of Italy as well. No wonder it has been called such a bewitching country!

Ally Di Censo Symynkywicz is a Graduate Student in History at the University of Massachusetts Boston. She appreciates any comments and suggestions about Italian holidays and folklore

THINKING OUT LOUD

by Sal Giarratani

Are You Going to Heaven or Hell?

I have seen a billboard for the last several weeks. Passed by it maybe once or twice a week. It states, "Where are you going — heaven or hell"? For most of us who believe in heaven or hell, the answer is heaven, but not today.

Now that the weather is quickly cooling down, thoughts of summer are but a mere memory. Like the Red Sox, it is wait until next year for summer to begin again. I was walking Dot, a sweet little dog. She seems to love this weather and enjoys the lack of heat and humidity. She hates summer when the temps go sky high. Also, when it comes to rainy days, she says, "Not for me."

October is a weird month for me. My daughter, Nealie, turned 29 years old on October 17th. This is a great day full of happiness. October 18th used to be a happy day, too, because it was my brother Dominic's birthday. He would have been 65 years old had he not passed away at age 56. Oh yeah, my mom passed away on October 18, 1992.

Too bad we can't stay kids longer, because the happy days always seem to outnumber the sad ones. October makes me appreciate life more with the blend of happy and sad thoughts. Our memories serve us well and keep everything in perspective.

This past Columbus Day, I was over in the City of Revere for its Columbus Day Parade. I rode in a convoy of Army trucks, and ended up in an armored vehicle riding in the machine gun nest like actor Christopher George in that old TV series Rat Patrol. I was having such fun; the Winthrop American Legion Post commander told me I was having too much fun stirring up cheers from the crowd that lined the parade route.

Someday, that billboard will toll for me, but hopefully not for a while. I never worry. I try and do good and know that life is a gift. When it's my time, it's my time. My mother was very Irish and she didn't worry about the end times. At 75 years old, she took her first airplane trip. When my brother asked if she was nervous, she said, "No, because when your time is up, it's up. You could be in a plane or on an MBTA bus." She just smiled and enjoyed that trip.

No one wants to go to hell; it's just an expression we want to throw around at others who bug us.

If you live your life well, help others and just have fun along the way, you don't have to worry about where you are going. You won't be needing lots of sunscreen #90 where you're going.

Right now, the only place I am going is out into the sunshine and enjoy the rest of this day, and you should, too.

Boston Architectural College Celebrates Presidential Investiture

Community Gathers to Formally Invest Glen S. LeRoy as Seventh President

Faculty, staff, students, alumni, and friends of the Boston Architectural College (BAC) celebrated new leadership with the official Presidential Investiture of Glen S. LeRoy, FAIA, FAICP. More than 200 guests came together as a community at The Harvard Club of Boston to celebrate the BAC's next chapter, which will be led by LeRoy as the College's seventh president.

Delegates representing higher education and professional associations marched in the investiture procession, joined by members of the BAC's internal community, including student representatives, deans, vice presidents, and members of the Board of Trustees. Delegates from the higher education community included esteemed presidents and leaders of universities and colleges in Boston and beyond. Among those representing the professional associations marched president of the American Institute of Architects (AIA), Elizabeth Chu Richter, who also provided a greeting.

Dana Rowan, chair of the BAC's Board of Trustees, led the historic ceremony, which was started off with a welcome from Massachusetts State Representative Jay Livingstone. Guests included Boston city councilors; fellow higher education and design field leaders; and family, friends, and colleagues of LeRoy from across the country.

Rowan started the ceremony with a brief history of the BAC, then looked forward to the College's future.

"The mission of education by its very nature is always a work in progress," said Rowan. "And thus the BAC must continue to build on its proud history, engaging the talents of thoughtful leadership, exceptional faculty, and inspired students."

The BAC's students were a main focus of the ceremony, with a greeting from Bachelor of Architecture candidate Rand Lemley. Joined on stage by three of his peers, each representing a different school, Rand identified the BAC's inclusive and supportive community as what make it a special place to study and grow as a designer.

"We have open admissions that give a chance, and in some cases, a second chance, for students to pursue quality design education," said Rand. "I migrated from Texas to Boston, sight unseen, three years ago with only two foot lockers of possessions. Through the rigor of the BAC and the support of my peers in design, I am working at a premier architecture firm in the city while two years away from graduation."

BAC alumni also welcomed and addressed the audience. Stephen Messinger, Master of Architecture graduate, class of 2011, and current Alumni Board president, spoke on behalf of the alumni body and expressed excitement about working together with LeRoy. Carole Wedge, Bachelor of Architecture, class of 1990, and president of Shepley Bulfinch, represented the design firms as she spoke about the value and impact of the BAC.

"The BAC stands for excellence and relevance, and the relationship between practice and education is in our DNA," Carole said. "The architects of Boston came together to found the BAC and have been employers, teachers, and advocates for students and excellence in design education ever since. We want Glen and the whole BAC community to know that Boston's design practice is committed to a successful future together."

Other greetings came from the BAC's Director of Liberal Studies and faculty member Victoria Hallinan and the Executive Director of Professional Arts Consortium (ProArts) Ross Bresler, who welcomed LeRoy to the ProArts family, which is comprised of seven Boston-area colleges dedicated to the visual and performing arts.

LeRoy brings years of experience in higher education to his new role as BAC president. He served as the dean of the College of Architecture and Design at Lawrence Technological University (LTU) for 10 years, where he demonstrated a proven commitment to increasing enrollment, planning and implementing a strategic vision, and supporting a diverse student body. Paired with this, LeRoy was a principal at the architectural and design firm Gould Evans Associates for 15 years. This combination of experience in both the classroom and the design field represents his commitment to practice-based learning, which is the core of the BAC experience.

As the ceremony came to a close, President LeRoy concluded the investiture with a simple, yet powerful, remark:

"The Boston Architectural College is the right school at the right time, in the right city to enhance, and perhaps reinvent, practice-based design education in the 21st Century. I ask that you join us in this worthy endeavor."

Friends of Christopher Columbus Park Annual Fundraising Gala

The Friends of Christopher Columbus Park (FOCCP) and Honorary Co-Chair Mayor Martin J. Walsh invite North End and Waterfront neighbors and businesses to join them on Friday, November 6, 2015, at the Boston Harbor Hotel to support the neighborhood gem: Christopher Columbus Park. The event begins at 6:30 pm, and features a cocktail reception and buffet, dancing to the Beantown Swing Orchestra and a silent auction.

"Our Annual Fundraiser enables us to enhance one of the most beautiful parks in the City of Boston," says Joanne Hayes-Rines, FOCCP president. "Our major effort is to light up winter evenings by bathing the trellis in blue lights and illuminating 14 trees throughout the park. We also host family-friendly events throughout the year, maintain the Rose Kennedy Rose Garden, the Crescent Gardens and work with the Boston Parks and Recreation Department to assure the safety and cleanliness of the park."

The Platinum Level corporate sponsors for this year are NorthEndBoston.com and Sanibel Electric. Gold Level sponsors are Boston PushCart, Boston Harbor Cruises, CL Waterfront Properties, Joe's American Bar & Grill, One Medical Group, Marriott Long Wharf Boston, Sunstone Hotel Investors and Tia's Restaurant.

For information about the 2015 Annual Gala and sponsorship opportunities, go to www.foccp.org or call (781) 639-6002.

The Friends of Christopher Columbus Park is an all-volunteer non-profit organization comprised of North End and Waterfront neighbors and businesses whose purpose is to further the restoration, protection, preservation, care, enhancement, improvement, and maintenance of the Christopher Columbus Waterfront Park. The FOCCP works closely with the City of Boston Parks and Recreation Department to keep the park clean and well maintained, and with other city and state organizations to improve the park and to enrich the lives of both residents and visitors to Boston.

ALL THAT ZAZZ

by Mary N. DiZazzo

Celebrate the Pumpkin

Ciao Bella,

One of the only saving graces to the end of summer and the start of autumn are the magnificent colors of the season. The grand pumpkin! Bright eye candy! It's an uplifting sight to see them lined up at farm stands and piled up in front of the grocers. Such a sturdy fruit, so yummy and then again another of Mother Nature's beauty treatments and medicinal cures!

This orange squash is native to North America. Approximately 90 percent of pumpkins from the United States are grown in Illinois. Pumpkin color can vary, but most popular are orange and yellow.

Inside the core, which contains the seeds that are high in Zinc content, known to be terrific for the skin. The Zinc helps to heal acne blemishes and sooth irritated skin. The alpha-hydroxy acids help to exfoliate and revitalize. The pulp is also used to reduce the appearance of scarring. The bright colored fruit are chock-full of multivitamins which nourish the skin.

Vitamin C maintains skin health by preventing the collagen from breaking down. Vitamin A softens and cleanses the skin.

In days gone by it was staple food of the Native Americans. They used it to make medicine and wove dried strips of it into mats. It was also used as a cure for freckles, and as a remedy for snakebites! You can find the benefits of pumpkin in your beauty aisle. There are peels and facial masks and anti-aging creams along with lotions, shampoos and body washes.

Here is a do-it-yourself facial with this extraordinary fruit!

Mix 2 teaspoons pureed pumpkin, 1/2 teaspoon honey, and 1/4 teaspoon heavy cream.

Smooth on face leaving on for 10 minutes. Rinse off with warm water for glowing, smoother skin!

Buona giornata and God bless the United States of America!

Here's wishing all my associates at the Post-Gazette and my readers a fun and spooky Hallowe'en!

Saint Canute IV of Denmark

by Bennett Molinari and Richard Molinari

Canute was born in 1042, one of the many sons of Svend II Estridsen. When Svend died, Canute's brother Harald III was elected king, and Canute went into exile in Sweden, where it is believed he was possibly involved in the active opposition to Harald. Canute succeeded Harald to the throne of Denmark in 1080. Once on the throne, he married Adela, daughter of Count Robert I of Flanders. She bore him one son, Charles and twin daughters Caecilia and Ingerid who married Folke the Fat. Their descendants, the House of Bjelbo, would ascend to the throne of Sweden and Norway.

Canute's reign was marked by attempts to increase royal power which was a major change from the weak, ineffective reign of his brother. Canute was a champion of the Church, and issued laws to protect the weak, orphans, widows, and foreigners, and tried to enforce the collection of tithes. His policies led to discontent among his subjects, who were unaccustomed to a king who claimed such powers and who interfered in their daily lives.

Canute built churches and monasteries and required observation of church holidays. He gave large gifts to the churches in Dalby, Odense, Roskilde, and Viborg, and especially to Lund where he authorized the building of a cathedral. He also established the Lund cathedral school.

Canute was also the grand-nephew of Canute the Great, who ruled England, Denmark and Norway until 1035 and he considered the crown of England to be rightfully his and considered King William I of England to be a usurper. Canute had aspirations to invade England in an effort to take the throne from the aging William the Conqueror. Canute ordered the assembly of 1000 Danish ships and 60 Norwegian ships in the Limfjord (Northern Jutland).

In 1085, with the support of his father-in-law, Count Robert and Olaf III of Norway, Canute planned an invasion of England. The invasion never took place due to the civil unrest of his subjects, Canute was delayed in joining the assembled ships, which were waiting for him in the Limfjord. When Canute finally arrived he found that the majority of the Danish ships had gone home after growing impatient waiting for their king to arrive. Canute was furious at what he felt was to be a betrayal. Without adequate manpower to attack England he sent the Norwegians home, and then ordered enormous fines for those Danes whom he felt had abandoned him. These fines amounted to more than the annual income for the majority of Danes at the time. The people turned on their king and revolted. In Northern Jutland buildings associated with the king were attacked and burned, and royal officials were murdered.

Canute, his brother Benedikt and their supporters were forced to first flee to Southern Jutland, and then to the island of Funen. On Funen the group then made their way to Odense. However, news quickly spread that Canute was located in Odense and a large group of peasants and rebels pursued Canute and his followers into the local wooden structure, St. Alban's Priory. On July 10, 1086, Canute was killed by rebels along with his brother, Benedict and 17 others at the altar of Saint Alban's Priory in Odense, Denmark. Canute was canonized by Pope Paschal II in 1101 at the urging of his brother and successor King Erik the Good.

From that time on "Saint Canute and his brother Benedikt's remains have been located in the Cathedral's crypt at Odense.

Saint Canute is the first Danish saint and the patron saint of Denmark, his feast day is celebrated on January 19th.

Mrs. Murphy . . . As I See It

We have 24 million people incarcerated that are non-violent offenders in this country today. There are more people in prison in the U.S.A. than anywhere in the world. These offenders mostly consist of drug offenders and the mentally ill. The cost to taxpayers is approximately $50,000 to $60,000 a year, per person. We can put this money to better use by taking better care of our veterans, seniors, education, fixing our roads, etc. ... Eight thousand people die a year from heroin alone, yet nothing is being done in this country to stop the drugs from coming in! The only candidate talking on this important issue is Donald Trump. The big movement in this country today is not drugs, the media have decided to cover "Black Lives Matter." Only in America! ... It's the thing of the future, but is Mayor Walsh's proposal of putting bike lanes in East Boston a good idea? Many residents don't think so. East Boston is a heavily congested city with narrow streets and an abundance of cars would make riding bikes, even in a bike lane, a dangerous situation! As it is now, with parking on both sides of the streets, cars are unable to pass one another. How can anyone expect a bicyclist to maneuver through Easties' streets safely? The approach puts pedestrians, bicyclists and transit users on equal ground with motor-vehicle drivers, Mayor Walsh explained. Bad idea and a dangerous one at that! ... Another of Mayor Walsh's Boston neighborhood proposals, an IndyCar race through the Seaport district. Seaport condo owners aren't pleased!!! A 2.2 mile racetrack, which would circle the Boston Convention Center and Exhibition Center and travel Congress Street and the South Boston Bypass may be good for Boston's economy, but not so good for residents that live in the area. Mayor Walsh said the tourism and television audiences far outweigh the damaging impacts on the city and neighborhoods. Neighborhood people disagree! ... If you're looking for a hearty breakfast at affordable prices, look no further, Elite Donut in Day Square offers a breakfast you can't finish. The quaint breakfast shop, now decorated for Halloween, has a whole new menu that will satisfy anyone's cravings! ... The pledge by Mayor Walsh to add more police on the streets of East Boston is comforting to residents who are becoming concerned with the rise in crime in their city ... With property on the rise in East Boston, the Boston Inspectional Dept., and Boston Redevelopment are trying to enhance East Boston by going around to businesses making sure they're in compliance with city ordinances. Also, the BRA is discouraging new businesses from installing grates, trying to give Eastie a safe environment look ... We will be turning the clocks back shortly. Have a safe and fun filled Happy Halloween ... Till next time!

North End Against Drugs Family Dinner/Family Talk

On Monday, November 16th, North End Against Drugs will host its Family Dinner/Family Talk at the Nazzaro Center. The event will start at 6:00 pm.

A delicious Italian meal will be served, which will include: macaroni, meatballs, salad, bread & butter, a soft drink and light dessert. A guest speaker has not yet been confirmed, but it will be someone to talk about drug abuse. The topic and manner presented will be appropriate for all ages. Despite what some may feel, it is never too early for your child to learn about the dangers of drugs and alcohol. This is for North End residents and Nazzaro Center members. It is free and space is limited.

NEAD's annual Hat & Glove Collection for the St. Francis Homeless Shelter on Boylston Street in Boston will also be held at the event. We are looking for new hats and gloves for men and women. Even if you are not attending the dinner, you can help those in need during the cold weather by dropping off new hats and gloves on November 16th at the Nazzaro Center.

Please email John Romano at jromano45@gmail.com to let him know how many in your family will be attending. Adults must attend with their children and vice versa. Grandparents and other family members are also encouraged to attend with the children.

The time of year when families gather for reunions, dinners and parties also means the funniest family function around. Peter Fogel arrives in Boston for two weeks only, December 9 to December 20, 2015 in Steve Solomon's My Mother's Italian, My Father's Jewish & I'm Home for the Holidays!, playing at the historic Regent Theatre in Arlington, MA.

Presented by Philip Roger Roy and Dana Matthow, the comedy chaos continues in this critically acclaimed sequel to Steve Solomon's original, three-time award-winning hit, My Mother's Italian, My Father's Jewish & I'm in Therapy.

Directed by Andrew Rogow, this hilarious one-man show follows Steve's struggles to get home for the holidays. While trapped in the airport, Steve (played by Peter Fogel) goes through the hilarious craziness of dealing with the bureaucracy and the challenges of handling hysterical phone calls from his family.

In a wonderfully funny performance, Fogel tackles the holidays, his adolescence, mixed marriage, ex-wives, dogs, cats, dieting and dozens of other uproarious and endless relatable situations each performed with dialects and wacky sound effects that only add to the hilarity of each story.

And then there's the holiday dinner at Grandma's where, if you're under 55, you still sit at the children's table, and 35 over-fed people compete for one bathroom (with no plunger!)

My Mother's Italian, My Father's Jewish & I'm in Therapy plays for just two weeks at the Regent Theatre, 7 Medford Street, Arlington, MA.

Tickets are available online at www.regenttheatre.com or via telephone at 781-646-4849.

For group rates and information call 1-888-264-1788.

The Regent Theatre is wheelchair accessible. The Regent Theatre has FREE parking right across the street from the theatre on weeknights and Saturday after 6pm, and all day Sunday! All spots are free (including "permit only" spots) after listed times.

THOUGHTS BY DAN

ABOUT THIS & THAT

with Daniel A. DiCenso

JUAN DOMINGO PERON

(October 8, 1895, Buenos Aires, Argentina-July 1, 1974, Buenos Aires):

A Puzzle of a Man

The Peróns, Argentina's iconic royal couple.

It's hard to get a solid unbiased grip on the legacy of Juan Domingo Perón, who was president of Argentina three times (1946-51, 1952-55, and 1973-74). Not only because so much of his time ruling the country is discussed through the eyes of his wife, Evita Duarte, but because his admiration for fascist regimes is a hard point to overlook. Who the real Juan Perón was is indeed an enigmatic question. His policies and legacies are widely debated, remaining a starkly divisive figure in Argentina pitting the Peronistas (the coining of that political term is the clearest indication of his continued influence in Argentinian politics), against the lower classes.

This was born out of his military tenure in Mussolini's Italy from 1939-1941, where he began to see Mussolini's practices as a useful way to avoid dictatorship, class warfare, and the disappearance of states in his own country. However valid his fears were, and later Argentinian history proved that they were not altogether unfounded, the dictator's propaganda worked on Perón.

It's important to remember here, however, that Perón's introduction to Mussolini was before the Italian leader joined forces with Hitler, and his willful adoption of Mussolini's fiscal were separated from Hitler's hatred, anti-Semitism, and plain lunacy. For the young Argentinian general, Italy's policies during the early war years were a useful path to creating an equal socio-economic state in which all classes contributed and benefited from the national output. The state would control all unions, policies, and be responsible for resolving all worker disputes. The leader of the state would then appoint delegates to each corporation.

As the war years saw traditional fascism come tumbling down, Perón likely tweaked his role model and created a modified rule upon his first presidency, which would form the nutshell of his legacy. He divided Argentina into a number of corporations with strong political weight. He nationalized the Central Bank of Argentina, created the state-owned Promotion of Trade to monitor imports and exports, and gave himself, once elected democratically in 1946, control of the industries without legislative red tape.

There were many good things to come out of this and to this day many Argentinians defend Perón's vision. Each industry, for instance, had a trade union and social security was made universal. For students who performed well enough to qualify, higher education was made free regardless of their economic class. Paid vacations became a standard for everyone, but students who were working to support their families while going to school were given an extra week before exams. In addition, maternity leave was granted for three months and the rights of workers everywhere were improved.

However, the government got too big to be controlled by one party, as Perón had devised. His economic boom was not without its disadvantages. Most telling was the amount of fertile land left uncultivated due to government interference, which resulted in a workers' strike. This kind of climate would facilitate the efforts of Arturo Frondizi, when he organized a coup in 1955 to overthrow Perón. Once he succeeded (with the help of businessman Rogelio Frigerio, who had once ventured as a Communist until he became a millionaire), and began using the economy toward

by Jeanette Cataldo

Let's Talk Seasonal Centerpieces and Tablescapes ...

This is one of my favorite times of the year for creating festive tablescapes. Out come the table scarves, pumpkins, greenery, pops of color and lots of fun. You can be cozy, romantic, sophisticated, formal or whimsical.

Have fun with it, nothing is more inviting than a dressed table.

Here are a couple of tablescapes I recently finished for my clients.

Very colorful and festive, lots of fun.

Neutral tones and glass accents add a little more formality.

Perfect for a Thanksgiving tablescape.

Mix it up a little ... spray paint a few pumpkins and gourds high-gloss white and mix in a few unpainted. You can place them in a glass dome or on a dish. A great look!

Cozy to romantic, you can never go wrong with multiple candles in any tablescape.

This is a very versatile tablescape. This can take you from Halloween to Thanksgiving.

North End Against Drugs Goes to the Circus

Thanks to the generosity of NEAD partners TD Garden Neighborhood Charities, on Thursday, October 15th, 60 members of the NEAD Family attended the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus, dubbed "THE GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH!" The children and their families had an awesome time. NEAD were treated to fantastic seats in the lodge for less than the cost of a regular priced balcony seat, which was incredible. We are extremely grateful to our friends at Neighborhood Charities!

Below are some photos of the children who attended and several from the show itself.

BARELY LETHAL –
MOTION PICTURE
SOUNDTRACK

Lakeshore Records

Lakeshore Records is the source for the 25-tracks of music for the film Barely Lethal. From the opener "Prescott," to the final track "Prescott Reprise," there is a multitude of highs and lows. Mateo Messina, who composed the score, lets his music do the talking, creating the Barely Lethal original motion picture soundtrack. Sandwiched between the "Prescotts" are, "Fight Club," "Oh Canada," "Band Ass," two samples of "Truth Serum" (A&B), "Car Chase," and "Number One." The action comedy continues to bring smiles, and the music continues to keep coming with, "White Van," "Newton Suite" trailed by the ballad sound of "Megan & Roger Suite," along with "Bad Guys," "High School," "Higher School," "Nearly Chanced," "Popcorn," and the soaring "Helicopter."

KISS 40:
DECADES OF DECIBELS

Universal Records

KISS, with all the memories one may need, took one track from each of the 39 albums they have released in their four-decade career. KISS 40 is the group's first release since their 2014 induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. The two-disc compilation also contains "Reputation," a 1977 demo from Gene Simmons. Included in the track listing are cuts such as 1975's "Rock and Roll All Nite," the 1976 charting "Beth," closing out the '70s with "I Was Made for Lovin' You." Delving into the '90s with a remix of "Forever" and touching the end of the decade with their '98 hit "Psycho Circus." The release of this album was met with complaints from fans that it was yet another "compilation" — of which the listeners had had enough. But this is a collection that has KISS delivering their history of both classics and extras that some of us may have forgotten about, but are happy to hear them again. Don't KISS this group off, yet!

NO ESCAPE – ORIGINAL SCORE

Lakeshore Records

Marco Beltrami and Buck Sanders received the task of creating the original score for the movie No Escape. Beltrami has already received two Academy Award nominations, and with Sanders riding "shotgun" he is far from done. No Escape is a thriller that saw Beltrami and Sanders utilizing scores created with manipulated Asian percussion and synths, along with a blend of some string orchestra. The 27-track listing opens to the droning sound of "The President's Toast," followed by movie enhancing cuts like, "Little Dreamer," "Market Research," "Where's Lucy," "Rooftop Refugee," "Map Quest," and "The Bike Thief." The transitions installed within the score are fascinating, taking the listener on a roller coaster of emotion via cuts as, "Embassy Issues," "Fighting for Annie," "Under the Stars," "Gunshy," "South of the Border," "The Story of Lucy," and the final track "Take Care of You — Jim James." There's No Escape from this exciting collection of aggressive and excellent music!

THOMAS RHETT – TANGLED UP

RCA Records

Thomas Rhett pulls out all the stops on Tangled Up, his sophomore release following his debut album, It Goes Like This. Rhett resounds effectively with sounds as the opener, "Anthem," followed by his hit "Crash and Burn." You can't stand still for "South Side," then shows off his soulful side with a tribute to his wife titled "Die a Happy Man," the celebratory "Vacation." Party-time begins and ends with "Like It's the Last Time." It's no contest that "T-Shirt" is a winner for Rhett, trailing with the encouragement of "Single Girl," the straightforward "The Day You Stop Lookin' Back," the pleading confession of "Tangled," and the burning emotion of "Playing with Fire" featuring Jordin Sparks. Rhett takes it on home with the care-free "I Feel Good" featuring Lunchmoney Lewis. The finale is in the form of "Learned it from the Radio." A baker's dozen of songs flavored by the tasty country vocals of Thomas Rhett!

MOTION PICTURE

Lakeshore Records

Trumbo is a film about 1940s screenwriter Dalton Trumbo and his fight against the U.S. government and studio bosses in a war over words and freedom. An intriguing musical score penned by Theodore Shapiro, one of Hollywood's most sought after composers, along with classic tracks from Big Jay McNeely and Billy Holiday. McNeely swings to and fro with the rocking "Willie the Cool Cat," and the immortal Holiday delivers "Ain't Nobody's Business if I Do" in a way that only she can. Shapiro was able to mold the music to relate to the period of time of the film, yet giving it a modern feel. As Shapiro commented, "Throughout the score I used dense clusters of harmony, useful both for their tonal complexity and subtle evocation of jazz harmonies. The main theme of Trumbo is a simple and haunting theme played on the piano, with dark block chords in the bass and a droning texture of low saxes and electronically manipulated cello." The result — 28 cuts composed with the ability to effectively deliver the film's story and message very clearly!

INDIGENOUS PEOPLE PARADE PROTEST

As I passed by Hanover onto Cross Street in the North End for the Columbus Day parade, I noticed an anti-Columbus protest talking about the rights of indigenous people that Columbus conquered. Only trouble, there were no indigenous protesters at the parade. To be authentic, you do need indigenous folk at a protest for the indigenous. Otherwise it looks just like any other progressive left politically correct protest.

JACKIE EVANCHO — October 23, 2015. Evancho dazzled American television audiences at age 10, gaining global recognition with her stunning debut on NBC's America's Got Talent. She was immediately signed to Columbia Records where she released a string of successful recordings including "O Holy Night," "Dream with Me," "Heavenly Christmas" and "Songs from the Silver Screen." She has since acted in Robert Redford's The Company You Keep, and performed as a special guest in Cirque du Soleil's One Night for One Drop benefit at the Bellagio in Las Vegas. She performed the classic film song "Over the Rainbow" at the prestigious Songwriters Hall of Fame induction ceremony. Evancho performed before 100,000 people in Russia with opera stars Dmitri Hvorostovsky and Sumi Jo prior to the opening of the St. Petersburg Economic Forum, and has performed at the Imperial Palace. Her first PBS special was one of the top pledge producing performances in PBS history. Her wide-ranging achievements caused Billboard to include her on its list of "music movers-and-shakers under the age of 21" in 2011 and 2012.

You will first enter a terrifying chamber and come face-to-face with the most horrific spine-chilling, spirit-filled rooms. This Factory has been idle since 1856 when the graveyard shift encountered the most terrifying mystery murder massacre. Yes, all 113 Factory employees were mysteriously murdered in an area of the Factory so large and creepy that the employees referred to this 30-room area of the Factory as Bloodworth Dungeon. Only one Factory worker barely survived the Bloodworth Dungeon massacre! However, he was admitted to the State Psche Ward where he soon died from mental torment after continuously repeating "Bloodworth Dungeon," "Bloodworth Dungeon," "Bloodworth Dungeon" ... Now dare to enter this horrific area of the Factory that the midnight shift workers referred to as Bloodworth Dungeon and to this day haunts and terrifies any one that dares to enter.

Ready for this? Springfield, MO, last month updated its indecent exposure laws to require women to cover a greater percentage of their breasts in public, in response to "Free the Nipple" rallies organized by local feminists. The law also requires that both sexes "cover 100 percent of their buttocks." A provision barring the display of "covered male genitals in a discernibly turgid" state was removed from the final law.

Holy water, after Rep. Bob Brady (D-PA), stole a half-glass of water that Pope Francis drank from during his address to Congress, and used the water to "bless" his staff and family.

Pope Francis called on U.S. priests to devote more time to their parishioners' spiritual needs. But 20 percent of U.S. parishes no longer have a priest in residence. For each U.S. priest, there are 2,600 parishioners.

Huh? California became the fifth U.S. state to legalize doctor-assisted suicide when Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown signed a controversial bill that allows physicians to prescribe lethal doses of drugs to terminally ill patients.

More news from California. A man got much more than he expected when he opened his delivery from Domino's: $1,299 in cash. Instead of the chicken wings he expected, Mike Vegas found two thick stacks of cash inside the box, one containing $666, and the other $633. Vegas called the driver, who had meant to take the money-filled box to the bank. Domino's rewarded Vegas with a year of free pizza. "Honest people are hard to find these days," said a Domino's manager.

Stupidity! A Michigan driver with a phobia of spiders sparked a raging fire at a gas station when he tried to kill one of the critters with a cigarette lighter. Security footage showed the man filling up his car and then peering inside the fuel door and asking, "Is that a spider in there?" When he ignited his lighter, a blaze suddenly engulfed the car, the pump and, possibly the spider. The driver put out the flames with a nearby fire extinguisher and returned to the gas station the next day to apologize. "He was sorry," said a clerk. "It's just one of those things that happen — stupidity."

Hairy news! Doctors have warned that the hipster "man bun" hairstyle popularized by Jared Leto and Leonardo DiCaprio could be causing an epidemic of premature baldness. When men yank their hair back in a tight bun, they put a damaging strain on follicles around their hairline, which can result in a form of hair loss known as traction alopecia, explained Dr. Sabra Sullivan, a dermatologist. "I see (the condition) probably once or twice a week now," she said, warning that if hipsters feel they have to have a bun, they should wear it loose. "You don't want to go for hair transplants later."

The share of foreign-born people living in the U.S. will rise to an all-time high within the next decade, according to a new Pew Research Center report. By 2025, at least 14.9 percent of people living in the U.S. will have been born outside the county — topping the previous high of 14.8 percent set in 1890. Today, about 45 million people, or 13.7 percent, of those living in the U.S. were born elsewhere.

News from Detroit: For the first time since 1950, Detroit's white population increased in 2014, by 8,000 people. White millennials seeking housing bargains are moving in.

Selling pizza to Italians: "In what looks like a case of bringing coals to Newcastle," Domino's is bringing pizza to the land where it was invented, said Clara Linnane of MarketWatch.com. The chain has opened an outlet in Milan, Italy, with plans for another three in the city by year's end. Nearly half of Domino's $8.9 billion in sales last year came from outside the U.S., but even its executives acknowledge that selling American pizzas to Italians won't be easy. "No major American pizza brand has successfully entered the (Italian) market," said Richard Allison, president of Domino's International. "We're going where no major pizza brand has gone before." Domino's will offer traditional Italian ingredients, like prosciutto di Parma, and locally sourced wheat. But the company is hoping that its online ordering tech will be its secret sauce. Takeout isn't common in Italy, despite Italians eating pizza an average of seven times a month.

Carlo Scostumato thinks Domino's should also sell their own version of calzone.

It's true! Sales of full-calorie soda in the United States have fallen by more than 25 percent over the past 20 years. In a scramble to adjust to changing consumer tastes, Coca-Cola has increased the number of individual products it offers to 700 this year, up from 400 in 2004.

Good move! A new restaurant in McKinney, Texas, is giving adults with special needs a sense of purpose and a paycheck of their own. The Hugs Cafe primarily hires employees with Down Syndrome and other developmental and intellectual disorders. Owner Ruth Thompson, who got the idea in a dream, offers competitive wages and tailors each job to suit her 24 teammates, as she calls them. "We're not giving them a handout," she said. "We're giving them a hand up." For many, it's their first paying job. "It's a chance to show ourselves that we can work, like anyone else," said cashier Mike Sesson.

The Justice Department announced that it will release about 6,000 inmates serving sentences for drug offenses — the largest one-time release of federal prisoners in U.S. history. The move is part of an effort to reduce over-crowding in prisons and to free nonviolent drug offenders who were given harsh sentences in the 1980s and '90s. About a third of the inmates to be released are undocumented and will be quickly deported.

In brief. Most Americans receive an incorrect or delayed diagnosis at some point in their lives, a new government report finds, often with devastating consequences. Autopsy reports and medical records show that misdiagnoses contribute to 10 percent of patient deaths, reveals the study conducted by the Institute of Medicine's Health Advisory Committee. The study also blames a lack of communication between clinicians and patients, and a medical culture that discourages doctors from admitting mistakes.

Interesting news! An antioxidant in green tea boosts metabolism and thus helps burn fat. Green tea can be your caffeine source, too, and it has proven memory-enhancing powers. Yes! We do enjoy having a "spot of green tea." This can be attributed to when we were stationed in England and billeted with the McCormick's. That's another story.

And so, one of our paesans, Yogi Berra, born Lawrence Peter Berra, has passed away. In brief: he was raised in St. Louis by Italian immigrant parents. Lawrence Berra, who was born in 1925, earned the nickname "Yogi" after a childhood friend remarked that he looked like a "snake charmer in a movie," said CNN.com. Yes, he was one of the greatest catchers in baseball history, a Hall of Famer. When World War II began, he joined the Navy, seeing combat on D-Day and later winning a Purple Heart.

So on this date, October 23, 2002, my wonderful wife Marilyn, mother of Karen and Robyn, passed away. She was professionally known as Marilyn Mitchell, a radio and TV hostess of children's shows on WCOP Radio and WBZ-TV. Yes, she was well-known and beautiful! We were married for 49 years. She had many, many fans! We purposely moved to Nahant for privacy. No one knocks on your door saying they were passing through Nahant and came by to see us. Yes, she was active in the town reading books to children at the Nahant Public Library. It would take a whole page to write about her accomplishments!

Our distinguished musicologist, and show biz genius, Albert Natale discovered a piece about Gabrielle "Coco" Chanel who wrote, "Jackie married Jack Kennedy for love, I suppose, but didn't get it. She married the Greek (Onassis) for money and got it. You tell me which marriage was the more successful." And Tony Curtis, said, "Janet Leigh was years ago! Nowadays I wouldn't be caught dead married to a woman old enough to be my wife!" Steve McQueen, said, "Ali McGraw is a good wife for me. We're both actors, but neither of us is a great, big, fat talent, and she's not all wild-eyed about her career, which suits me fine."

A poll of 2,250 Americans were asked to pick an age at which they could live in good health forever. The average person's favorite age was 50. Speaking of age, we are now so old that we no longer buy green bananas. Will I live to be 100? I think so. It has been said creative people live long. Irving Berlin made it to 101.

BRACCIOLETINI

20 thin slices of beef
(approx. 4" x 4")
1 cup flavored bread crumbs
2 small garlic cloves chopped
1 tablespoon grated Romano
cheese
1 tablespoon olive oil
3 metal skewers
(6 or 9 inches long)

MARINADE:
1 crushed garlic clove
1 tablespoon dried basil
2 tablespoons olive oil.

Prepare marinade first by mixing crushed garlic clove, basil and olive oil in a bowl and set aside. Then mix bread crumbs, chopped garlic, and grated cheese in a separate bowl. Additional bread crumbs may be needed depending on the number of Braccioletini you prepare. Add olive oil to slightly moisten the bread crumbs. Take one beef slice at a time. Spread about one teaspoon of bread crumbs in the center of meat. Leave sides of meat about half-inch clear of bread crumbs. Gently roll while folding in edges forming a small rolled piece. Squeeze the rolled meat in your hands. Insert metal skewer. Add each rolled Braccioletini onto skewer. They should fit tightly up against each other. When all Braccioletini are on skewers, place them into the marinade. Marinate for about 20 minutes. Before broiling, brush extra marinade over Braccioletini after placing them on the broiling tray. Brown on both sides. Check frequently because they cook fast.

Serve hot with mashed or baked potato and a vegetable or salad.

NOTE: When I make Braccioletini today, I select a bottom round roast at the supermarket and ask at the deli counter to have it sliced the thickness of cold cuts. Then I cut the larger slices to the size I need. Patience and experience are required but it is well worth the effort.

Braccioletini can be cooked on the gas grill, but must be watched because they burn easily.

A Nostalgic Remembrance

• This and That (Continued from Page 8)

foreign (usually American), investments. Among these was a grant of $60 million to a variety of American corporations to build twenty two power plants in Argentina.

These ventures had the potential for great economic growth in Argentina and, had he not let greed blind his progress, Frondizi may have given birth of a stronger economy than Perón did. Indeed, many good things came out of his business model, including Standard Oil's joint venture in Patagonia. But steel and meat production were suffering leading to inflation, which in turn created poor working conditions and strikes in major cities like Buenos Aires.

Perón's business model is a far cry from Mussolini's fascism and veers closely into socialism. Perón, however, avoided easy political labels. If so, that's just one more example of what makes Juan Perón such a fascinating figure. His politics and even ideology was full of contradictions, making him one of history's most enigmatic figures and one of the most complicated to understand.

The one incontrovertible blotch to his legacy is his sheltering of Nazi war criminals after the war. Argentina became the favored sanctuary for many of Hitler's men due in large part to Perón's avowed offering of protection. Among the big fish to flee were Adolf Eichmann and Josef Mengele. And yet, not only was Perón not an anti-Semite, but actually seemed to have a strong tie to Argentina's Jewish community. Indeed, his deal with former Nazis is recently appearing to be more of a business deal in which he (along with his wife Evita), were rewarded with stolen German loot in exchange for sanctuary. It's no less despicable, but it confirms that Perón was a man driven by business first. Paradoxically, Perón appointed more Jews in office than any other Latin American leader before him (to put this in perspective, however, Argentina had a larger Jewish population than the rest of South America). Argentina's Jewish community has spoken well of him. Ezequiel Zabolinsky, president of the Jewish-Peronist Organizacion Israelita Argentina, said of the leader, "When I realized that Perón, contrary to previous governments, gave Jewish citizens access to public office, I began to change my way of thinking about Argentine politics." Even U.S. Ambassador George S. Messersmith observed, "There is not as much social discrimination against Jews here as there is right in New York or in most places at home."

Given the shameful aid to war criminals he provided, it's shocking to learn about other things Perón and Evita did, including supporting the formation of organizations such as the New Zion, the Argentine-Jewish Institute of Culture and Information, and Argentine-Israeli Chamber of Commerce. In addition, he signed a commerce agreement with Israel (Argentina was the first Latin American country to recognize Israel as a state), and through the Eva Perón Foundation, sent humanitarian aid to Israel.

So what to make of Juan Perón and who was he really as a leader? His long history with Argentina is full of contradictions, diverse public opinions, and above all, misconceptions born out of these things. He is associated with fascism, but his policies had more in common with the Populist movement. His legacy is tainted by his aid of Nazi war criminals, and yet he did more for the Jewish community than any other Latin American leader. The legacy of Juan Domingo Perón is one with no easy answers but, for this reason, it's all the more important that he is studied with far greater insight than has been offered. He was a man of many faces, many ideas, and with a legacy of many different opinions.

We're in the middle of football season. I'm basically a baseball fan, but will watch and enjoy a Patriot's game. My sons have asked me why I didn't play football in high school. I have given them excuses: I had to work at the Seville Theater, I had too much home work, and the practice field was too far away from East Boston. These were all good and viable excuses, but there was another reason that I didn't share with my sons. I was thrown off the English High School football team by Bill Stuart, the head coach, because of carrying two duffle bags, one with my equipment and the other with submarine sandwiches.

The problem started out when I was a sophomore at EHS. I had graduated from the Joseph H. Barnes Junior High School when it was the middle school for my neighborhood. While attending the school I discovered that the cafeteria food was an affront to my taste buds. My only recourse was to bring food from home, and most of us with last names ending in vowels did just that. When I got to English High, I discovered that their cafeteria food was worse than what I had experienced at the Barnes. I brought my own lunch in a brown bag to counter this, but became aware that even the "American kids" were complaining about the lack of quality and taste of the school's cafeteria food.

I decided to go into business for myself and save the taste buds of my classmates. On the way home, I stopped at Santoro's Submarine Shop in Central Square, East Boston. The sub shop was within walking distance of the Seville Theater, and I often bought my lunch there. American subs were forty cents and Italian subs were sixty cents. (this was a long time ago). I knew the manager and day crew as they often waited on me or my fellow ushers from the theater. I worked out a deal through the manager. If I were to buy 100 subs at a time, I could receive a discount. American subs would cost me 25 cents instead of 40, and Italian, 45 cents instead of 60. Doing a little math and being a bit greedy, I figured that if I were to buy 100 subs and doubled the price to my fellow students, I could make a tidy profit every time I supplied them with good food.

I had made it as an offensive and defensive tackle on the junior varsity squad and was issued a duffle bag and all of the equipment and the uniform which would able me to represent English High School. A day or two later, I asked the coach for another duffle bag, claiming mine smelled badly and had holes in several locations. Without any problem, I was issued a second bag. This one was for Santoro subs, not football equipment. The arrangements would be made the day before and early the next morning, someone would be at the sub shop with the 100 subs for me to pick up. At first I concentrated on the American subs. One hundred of them would cost me 25 dollars. At school, I sold them out of my duffle bag for 50 cents apiece, making 100% profit on every one. I could only do this during my lunch time, but there were three lunches at English in those days. I found two enterprising individuals who would sell the subs during their lunches and gave them $5.00 each for helping me out.

If there were any subs left over, I would sell them at football practice and never headed home with any leftovers. After about a week of conducting business out of a football duffle bag, Dad and Babbononno heard me on the phone with a friend. Our conversation was about me bragging about my new business. After I hung up, I was grilled by both my father and grandfather about my illegal food supply. They were skeptical of the goings on and were worried about the outcome. They didn't have to wait long. About a month later, I was called to the front office to speak with the principal. Mr. McInerney had been a naval officer and had me stand at attention while being interrogated about my underground business. He commented on how the lunch profits had reduced due to my sandwich selling. I told him that the food was so bad that everyone was complaining and I decided to do something about it. He complimented me on operating on the behalf of the welfare of my fellow students, but I was "busted," as he put it.

That afternoon, I was dropped from the football team and had to turn in my duffle bag that contained my uniform and equipment. I was also told to return the second duffle bag that I used to transport the 100 submarine sandwiches that helped put English High School's cafeteria in the red. After a few days, I was called back to the principal's office. I was told that the administration had been lenient with me by not suspending me from school, but why was I still selling subs to my fellow students. I told the principal that I was out of business and had no idea who had picked up my idea.

The principal, the assistant principal and the head of guidance all patrolled the three lunches for the next few days until the culprit was caught. This time they suspended the individual. I guess I was lucky. If I ever went home and told my father, Babbononno or the ladies in my family that I had been suspended, I might not have lived to tell about it.

Even though I was out of business and off the football team, I believed in self preservation, even at an early age. I would walk to Central Square early in the morning, buy a half dozen subs, put them in a large lunch bag, and then put the lunch bag in my gym bag, and have a tasty lunch for myself and any of my close friends (especially from East Boston and the North End) who didn't want to deal with the horrid school food that English High's cafeteria served us.

I never went back to playing football. I hated to disappoint Dad, as this was his favorite sport. I, on the other hand, loved (and still do) the game of baseball. I am a dyed-in-the-wool Red Sox fan. Because I worked at the Seville Theater, I couldn't join English's baseball squad. I did play for the CYO League and the American Legion League in East Boston. I also played in college for four years, and was good enough to try out for Cincinnati's minor league teams. Thanks to Coach Sullivan at Boston State, I got a shot at pro baseball. I was good, but there were three guys in front of me who were great: Dave Concepcion, Joe Gordon and Pete Rose. I was good; they were great. That was it. Playing Double A ball paid $50 a game. I figured I could make more money playing bass than baseball and stuck with music for the next 50 odd years.

Years later, I found out why I didn't get suspended from English High when I was caught trying to put the cafeteria out of business. Dad was an administrator in the Boston School Department during the day and I think that enabled me to be saved. Who knows; it was a long time ago. GOD BLESS AMERICA legislation makes great sense with all the recent shootings and our mental health care delivery system.

As he clearly pointed out, back in 1955 there were 558,000 folks in hospital psych beds. Today, the number is below 55,000. Back in 1976 when I became a mental health counselor on an acute in-patient unit, the ward was overflowing, but by 1981 the unit's population shrunk thanks to reforms like deinstitutionalization (what a mouthful, huh?) and community-based services that are not actually there yet for most. End result, we have folks roaming the streets of America without community support or meds, too often. Not all, but some end up splashed across the news after a senseless act of violence like the most recent at a community college.

Right now, U.S. Rep. Murphy has gathered 130 co-sponsors of this bill, but it is still not reportedly on the fast track by the House leadership. I certainly hope it is, because they like the status quo. What do you think?

U.S. Troops
Becoming Sitting Ducks
President Obama announced that our current 9,800 troop presence in Afghanistan will remain until later in 2016 when it will draw back to 5,500. The next president who comes into office will then have to decide future troop levels. I think this strategy is called kicking the can down the road. Meanwhile, our troops remain in harm's way, for what purpose?

EXTRA Innings

by Sal Giarratani

Like the Cubs or Mets

Looks like I will be watching the NLCS since I like both the Chicago Cubs and NY Mets. I won't be watching the Blue Jays or Royals because that matchup looks boring to me. The last time the Cubs were in the World Series, daily newspapers were two cents apiece, Babe Ruth was still playing, and Teddy Roosevelt was still inside the White House.

As for the Mets, even though I still have a bad taste in my mouth going back to Game 6 of the 1986 World Series, I have always liked the underdog status.

Now is the time for the Cubs' Jon Lester to show why the Cubs' went after him. The Cardinals are a great NL team, but it was time for new post-season blood.

If I were the Mets front office, I would sign free agents to be Yoenis Cespedes and Daniel Murphy as soon as possible.

Fall River and Springfield Now in the Running

It appears that the Pawtucket Red Sox are not heading to Providence after all, and are most likely heading back to Massachusetts. Officials in Fall River and Springfield are now in the running for the Triple A farm team.

Cubs Look Like '04 Red Sox

According to Theo Epstein and Jon Lester, this year's Cubbies' reminds them of the 2004 "Cowboy Up" Red Sox that broke the Curse of the Bambino.

Matter of Justice

What Chase Utley of the LA Dodgers did in Game 2 of the NLDS was outrageous. The game umpires got it wrong, and Joe Torre did the right thing by overruling the umps. Personally, the two game ban that Utley is now protesting doesn't go far enough. He went out of the baselines and did an NFL-like tackle on the Mets infielder and reportedly broke one of his legs in half. Torre called for a two game suspension. I think the suspension needs to be far more severe. Hey, at least when Pete Rose took out Joe Ascue in an All-Star game he was trying to score at home, he didn't go running all over the place. Ascue was never the same after that play. Career over. Let's hope Ruben Tejada still has his baseball career to continue.

Stop the Presses! Boxer Wins Fight Using Left Jab!

GGG jabs Lemieux.

The other night I witnessed further proof of just how far removed today's boxing is from having any resemblance to the fine art it once was. It wasn't so much the fight itself, though that did contribute greatly to my feelings, but more so to the reaction during and after.

The fight was the Gennady Golovkin vs. David Lemieux Middleweight Title fight. I had debated whether or not to spend $50.00 (I had sworn never again to buy a Pay-Per-View fight), to view the bout as I do feel Golovkin is about the only fighter out there today who is worth watching. While contemplating my decision I watched some footage of Lemieux in action to see if I felt he would be at all competitive. It didn't take long for me to realize that this was certainly not going to be a match worth spending money on. Lemieux is a tough, strong kid with almost no boxing ability. Watching him in action I could immediately see he had learned what he knew from spending hours hitting the punch mitts. He threw his punches from his waist up and had no sense of footwork whatsoever. He tossed shots in a very predictable one-two and one-two-three manner while pausing in between to regain his balance. He obviously would have no chance against GGG.

Early the following morning I watched a replay of the fight. It was, as I expected, a very one-sided affair. Golovkin utilized a decent left jab to keep Lemieux at bay and to punish him. David was at a complete loss in being able to cope with the jab. He did not know how to slip it. He did not know how to parry it. It was as if he had never dealt with the jab before, it was like a foreign language to him.

Listening to the commentators, you would have thought Gennady had invented a new punch. They were in awe of his phenomenal jab. They kept rattling off the number he had thrown during each round. They also repeatedly commented on how this amazing punch was keeping Lemieux confused and unable to launch an offense. Yes! Gennady Golovkin was actually throwing left jabs. Just amazing!

The incredulity continued on social media. Fans were stunned by this display of boxing prowess. The dominant left jab was something most of them had never seen before. What was once the most basic and important punch in boxing was now being talked about as if it were a secret weapon delivered to the Earth by aliens from another planet with a vastly superior intelligence. Shock waves rippled throughout the Blog-o-sphere. Is Golovkin really one of us or some super being from a galaxy far away?

Back when boxing was actually being taught as the serious art it once was, the left jab was the first punch taught to aspiring boxers. Students were shown how it was both an offensive and defensive punch. How it was the key to landing any other punch. "Hey kid, if you can't land the jab, you can't land any other punch." was a common line heard in boxing gyms. Great contender Tony Shucco used to say, "Hit 'em with the left, they like it. Then every once in a while toss a right so they don't get bored." "Stick and move." "Pepper him with the left." "Pop that jab out there." were other lines you would hear over and over again back in the day.

On the flip side, young boxers were also taught how to slip and parry the jab. As great a punch as the jab could be for setting up an opponent, it could also be the opening your foe could use to counter you. Timing the jab and then throwing a right cross over it is a very effective maneuver. It takes a lot of practice, and not the type of practice you get hitting foolish punch pads. Another skill is slipping outside the jab and hooking to the body. This is a move rarely, if ever, seen today.

Another lost move is feinting the jab and then turning it into a hook. This is the tactic that was employed so effectively by Billy Conn in his first fight with Joe Louis. It almost won him the title.

Jabs also come in many different varieties. There is the tapping jab, where a fighter doesn't hit his opponent terribly hard, but hits him repeatedly and frustrates him by keeping him off balance with it. Then there is the stiff armed jab, that was used so well by Light Heavyweight Champion Bob Foster. Foster would snap his jab up from his waist and punch right through his opponents. It was a brutal punch that busted up many of his challengers.

It's funny, but as I was contemplating this column a friend sent me a clip of the Chuck Wepner vs. Sonny Liston fight. We had talked a bit about this whole madness over GGG using the jab, and my friend told me to take a look at Wepner in his losing fight with Liston. Yes, Wepner, the Bayonne Bleeder, the guy considered to have very few boxing skills was actually using a fairly effective left jab in this fight. It just goes to show that it wasn't all that long ago that even the crudest boxers knew to throw the jab. It would be interesting to see how Mr. Wepner's jab would do against today's unschooled heavyweights.

Wepner jabs Liston.

I am often criticized for pointing out the lack of boxing skills in today's fighters. I don't blame the boxers as they train hard, are in good shape, and are just following instructions. The problem lies in the fact that there are no good teachers out there. The techniques employed to develop these skills are not there either. Abel Sanchez, GGG's trainer, appears to be one of the only ones left who has some sense of the skills a good boxer should have, and that is why Golovkin is such a standout. The fact that his use of the most basic punch in boxing is such big news only reinforces my opinion that boxing is a dying, if not dead, art.

HOOPS and HOCKEY in the HUB

by Richard Preiss

RIGHTING THE SHIP — It was Bruins coach Claude Julien who remarked that, "it's always good to get on the road," before he walked out the door of the press conference room to begin preparations for his team's two-game road swing.

In the past, the B's have often used such a trip for bonding and team building, but there was a bit more urgency this time around as the Bruins fled Causeway Street for games out west against Colorado and Phoenix.

As the B's embarked it was noted that some eight of their next 11 games would be away from the Hub, where the confines of the Garden had been shown to be not so friendly, given the amount of booing that sent the B's to the showers after losing three straight games to Winnipeg, Montreal and Tampa Bay. A change of scenery seemed to be doing the B's well as they won both games to put the brakes on a somewhat dismal start.

AND THEN THERE WERE OPPOSITES — As we came upon our deadline Montreal was starting to separate itself from the rest of the pack in the NHL by virtue of its 7-0-0 start, the only remaining team in the league without a regulation or overtime/shootout loss. The stellar start was the best for the Canadiens in their long 106-year history as a franchise.

According to the Elias Sports Bureau, only one team in history started the season with more wins in regulation time — the 1975-1976 Buffalo Sabres who were victorious in eight consecutive contests.

Other teams that started the season with seven consecutive regulation wins were the 1985-1986 Quebec Nordiques, the 1993-1994 New Jersey Devils, the 1993-1994 Toronto Maple Leafs and the 1994-1995 Pittsburgh Penguins.

By contrast, there was the polar opposite in Columbus where the Blue Jackets had stumbled out of the starting gates with a winless 0-7-0 beginning. Already some 14 points separated Montreal from Columbus in the Eastern Conference standings, a margin that seemed destined to grow.

However, Columbus had plenty of company in NHL history. The Blue Jackets were the seventh team to begin a season with seven straight losses in regulation time. The last time it happened was back at the start of the 1997-1998 season when the Chicago Blackhawks also got off to a 0-7-0 start.

Columbus left its home arena facing a schedule that had the team playing seven of its next eight games on the road. As the Bruins demonstrated on their first road trip, that may not be a bad thing. If Columbus can manage to bag a few wins on the road then perhaps, as the season progresses, the team can climb out of the NHL cellar.

If Columbus does improve, the credit may be due to a new coach. As the road trip started, it was reported that veteran NHL mentor John Tortorella had been named the head coach at Columbus, replacing Todd Richards. Torts won the 2004 Stanley Cup with Tampa Bay, reached the 2012 Eastern Conference finals with the Rangers and last coached Vancouver in 2013-2014. Seems as if things are about to get all fired up in Columbus.

FROM HEARTBREAK TO HOPE — Hockey observed a sad anniversary on October 20 as everyone associated with the game in New England paused to reflect on the accident that left former Boston University player Travis Roy essentially paralyzed from the neck down.

Roy, who recently put in an appearance at the Garden, did manage to raise his right forearm briefly in a full wave to those in attendance. He was playing his very first shift in a regular season game for the Terriers back in 1995 when he went into the boards at Walter Brown Arena.

Now 40, Travis indicated in an extensive interview in the Boston Herald that he remains very active through the various activities associated with the Travis Roy Foundation. He conceded that it is doubtful that he will ever walk again. His goal, he said, was to become independent once again.

We know that every day brings a new day of hope, as sure as the sunrise, and here's hoping that new advances in the treatment of spinal cord injuries enable Travis and others that find themselves in similar situations may one day gain full independence and perhaps walk once again.

DO WE REALLY NEED FIVE SKATERS? — Teams that have played Arizona thus far in the young NHL season may be asking themselves that question since the Coyotes don't seem to fare well when they have the man advantage on the power play.

You see, though their first six games, the Coyotes had already given up four shorthanded goals. Having beaten the Coyotes on the road, the Bruins will play them again, this time at the Garden on Oct. 27. With over 70 games remaining on Arizona's schedule, one wonders how high that number of short-handed goals will go.

NOW IT CAN BE REVEALED — When asked by Improper Bostonian magazine what was the favorite thing he did with the 2011 Stanley Cup Bruins forward Brad Marchand replied, "Eating Cinnamon Toast Crunch out of it."

Other interesting tidbits from the issue include forward Jimmy Hayes indicating that, "I put everything on my right side first," when suiting up because of superstition, that center David Krejci's favorite game day routine is, "taking a nap," and that defenseman Torey Krug would be a lawyer if he weren't a professional athlete.
